

Dear FCC:

I am opposed to any new possible regulations (04-233) that would impact the free speech nature of Christian radio. I am encouraged and uplifted by stations such as KLOVE, and the new regulations you are considering would drastically affect my ability to continue to enjoy it. These regulations could force stations off the air, both from a financial standpoint as well as a free speech and religious stand point. To require community advisory boards could mean these stations are subject to review by those who may be unfriendly to their content. Also, in requiring additional staffing they could burden the stations to a standpoint that they could not financially survive. And, by giving priority to LPFM stations you could force translator stations off the air. These regulations are crossing the line into being restrictions on free speech and the exercise of religion and therefore I oppose them.

Sincerely,
